

Another picture that´s worth a thousand words…and a few more.

The latest iPhone is pretty awesome from what I hear. Isn't it incredible how much technology has advanced? But, wow…how this mini computer robs us of potentially valuable moments. My opinion.

I fall prey to it, don't you think different. This yin and yang of a vice, with its good and its bad, makes it easier to connect with people far away and get instant information, but it undeniably seems to reduce our interactions with those nearby.

I have to say, I often miss the days of rotary phones and heavy Encyclopedia Britannica books. I recognize, however, that as addictive as our handheld device can be, staying away from it might mean falling behind in a rapid evolving world.

Ahhh, what to do, what to do…If we would only learn to use it in moderation.

I am thankful for technology. I think. What are you thankful for today?

Until next Thursday´s post…si Dios quiere.

"Put your phone down. Pick your life up. Live life."

"Technology should improve your life not become your life."
